PCC Health Care Costs and OEBB Update
J. Donnelly, Joan Kapowich, OEBB Chief Administrative Officer, M. Canarella
OEBB Board member
Mr. Donnelly introduced Joan Kapowich and Michael Canarella to report on the Oregon Educators Benefit Board (OEBB) and answer Board questions regarding OEBB health insurance. Ms. Kapowich reported that health insurance premiums are impacted by a number for factors including the overutilization of some services, use of non-generic drugs, age of members, smoking habits, overweight and obesity and other factors. She reported that modeling OEBB health care plans into a Kaiser-like system would bring down costs and that implementing programs like the weight management program used by the Public Employee Benefits Board (PEBB) could increase the health and well-being in members and that could ultimately help drive down health care costs. She added that the cost of health insurance for members has increased greatly but the costs incurred by health insurance providers has greatly increased due to the types and quantities of benefits they are required to provide. Additional costs include 1% Oregon premium tax that will be used to fund children’s health care and 1% federal health reform tax. She said to reduce cost OEBB has added more case management, nurse services, disease management and increased focus on use of generic drugs. She said OEBB encourages members to take steps to be more responsible for their own health through diet, exercise, smoking cessation and other measures within their control. Ms. Kapowich said co-pay costs to members for some services will increase next year to encourage members to be more thoughtful in choosing to use them. Additionally, participation in programs such as Weight Watchers or smoking cessation, provided as member services, result in immediate reductions in use of health care procedures. She added that people who are vested in their own health feel better, are happier and are more productive. Mr. Canarella added that in negotiations with management for benefits both PCC federations agreed to move toward a cost reduction for health insurance benefit by benchmarking the ODS $300 deductible plan that will encourage people to more carefully evaluate their options and thereby reduce cost. Ms. Kapowich said there were many contributing factors to premium cost increases including higher use of generous plans by new members, spouses who lost jobs and were added to member insurance plans, health care providers who have costs to cover with a reduced number of patients. Mr. Canarella reported that under the smaller OSBA group Kaiser Insurance was more expensive than through the larger OEBB group, a clear indicator of benefit to PCC members is the reduction in premium cost through OEBB. Ms. Kapowich said OEBB provides member health education through newsletters, websites, creation of wellness committees within work groups, carrier wellness advocates, and Ms. Kapowich speaking to member groups.
Newberg Center Update
Barbara VanAmerongen, Program Manager Newberg/Dundee/Sherwood; Linda Degman, Associate Director, Bond Program; and Tim Eddy, Henneberry Eddy Architects.
Dr. VanAmerongen reported that enthusiastic community support in the Newberg/Dundee area was a determining factor in creating the Newberg Education Center as a bond funded project. She said progress is steady and property has been purchased, monthly meetings held with the Newberg advisory committee, as have consultations with community leaders, education and business leaders in preparation for building the center. Dr. VanAmerongen added that the Chehelem Cultural Center will be used as a temporary site for classes that will be ready for students Fall Term 2010 and that 67 students have already enrolled for Fall term general education classes at the Newberg Center. She said limited counseling/advising, placement testing, financial aid, veterans’ services would be available at the center to assist students in decisions about courses and technical programs PCC has at centers and campuses throughout the district. She reported that in addition to faculty a half-time director and a full-time administrative assistant will be housed at the Newberg Center. Dr. VanAmerongen said articulation agreements are being developed in the areas of business, education, music and art with George Fox University that will be of benefit to all PCC students. Partnerships have also been developed with Chemeketa Community College, Newberg High school and the Yamhill transportation system that will be of great benefit to students and the community. She added that PCC will participate in several community events and use various publicity, community relations and marketing techniques to raise public awareness of what PCC will have to offer students in their community.

Mr. Eddy said programming has been completed with very ambitious sustainable design goals set for the project in early 2009. He reported that work on the design began in January of this year, that the site master plan has been completed, land use approval has been received from the City of Newberg, building construction documents are about 50% complete and will be complete in late August, contractors have been prequalified who will bid the project, construction will start late this fall and the building will open for classes and programs in the fall of 2011. He said the goals for the project are to create multi-purpose classrooms, computer labs, and support spaces. He added that work continues with the Energy Trust of Oregon to meet the objective for this facility to be a highly sustainable building, less than 13,000 square feet with the potential to surpass energy code requirements. Mr. Eddy added that from an energy conservation standpoint this building will likely surpass all PCC buildings that have been built to date and that this building is being built with the idea of possible future expansion and growth. He said landscape as well as architecture is being designed with sustainability in mind.

Climb Center Update
Pamela Murray, Dean of Workforce and Business Development; and Jennifer Boehmer, Assistant Manager, Marketing
Ms. Boemer showed the board a video presentation that illustrated what the Climb Center is and how it will support business endeavors. Ms. Murray explained that about a year ago the decision was made to bring all four independent departments from the Center for Business and Industry into an interactive overarching departmental program with cross-trained staff that would reduce cost and increase efficiency and the name was changed to the CLIMB Center. Ms. Murray said the PCC Marketing Department has created strategies to promote the CLIMB Center with local business and industry. Ms. Murray added that the CLIMB Center is one of 32 colleges nation-wide that has been contracted to train TSA officers and Homeland Security. Additionally a $4.8 million grant was awarded by the Department of Labor that CLIMB will be part of with Allied Health Departments in coordination with seven Oregon community colleges with workforce investment boards. Ms. Murray said CLIMB’s current focus is on developing specific product lines and determining what emerging markets CLIMB wants to be part of. Ms. Murray reported that next year CLIMB will offer more professional development classes and will begin partnering with other organizations that have expertise in areas that CLIMB doesn’t but who want to offer their expertise through PCC. She noted that an important goal is for the CLIMB Center to be less and less dependent on state funding. Ms. Murray said next year’s income goal is $1 million. She also reported the CLIMB Center is one of only a few similar training centers across the nation that is making money and one of the center’s goals is to become a national model.

Ms. Boemer then showed the Board some of the unique marketing materials that have been developed for use by the CLIMB Center over the past year including radio spots, news articles, a website and other approaches. She noted the CLIMB Center is designed to be a key resource for working professionals and business owners without regard for where they are in development, just starting or already established; front line worker or CEO.

She said CLIMB embodies the PCC mission because it exists to contribute to a thriving community and does that through economic development by being as invested in client’s success as they are. Directors Palm and Harper expressed their enthusiasm and pleasure with the CLIMB Center’s ability to respond to the business community and garner their interest and support.

Mr. Morrow said bargaining for both federations begins in January with results dependent on outcomes from the upcoming legislative session.
