

TEACHING ENGLISH AT PCC: JOYS AND CONCERNS

- Jane R. Zunkel
 - PCC Cascade English Department
 - jzunkel@pcc.edu
-
- PCC Board Meeting – April 17, 2014

TEACHING ENGLISH AT PCC: JOYS AND CONCERNS

- Week 3
- Tawara Machi, Japanese poet
- All memorized,
- at last, the children's names,
- Now their papers
- begin to manifest
- some personality.

TEACHING ENGLISH AT PCC: JOYS AND CONCERNS

- Pictures removed for online version
- Writing 115 – Introduction to Expository Writing
- Joy – seeing students develop their academic voices and identities
- Concern – How can we maintain a focus on access while responding to the completion agenda?

TEACHING ENGLISH AT PCC: JOYS AND CONCERNS

- Pictures removed for online version
- Writing 115 – Introduction to Expository Writing
- Joy – seeing students develop their academic voices and identities
- Concern – How can we maintain a focus on access while responding to the completion agenda?

TEACHING ENGLISH AT PCC: JOYS AND CONCERNS

TEACHING ENGLISH AT PCC: JOYS AND CONCERNS

- Writing 121– English Composition
- <https://my.pcc.edu/cp/home/displaylogin>
- Joy – working with a broader range of students
- Concern – How do we offer the same quality of education to online students?

TEACHING ENGLISH AT PCC: JOYS AND CONCERNS

- Picture removed for online version
- English 106 – Introduction to Poetry
- Joy – discovering poetry with students and seeing their interpretive skills develop
- Concern – How can we maintain a solid, diverse program in the humanities and social sciences?

TEACHING ENGLISH AT PCC: JOYS AND CONCERNS

- Humanities: the Heart of the Matter (report and video)

- <http://vimeo.com/amacad>