"I am especially excited to share my life in the arts with the Portland academic and arts community. My fascination has always been with those aspects of America that have not been perceived as part of the mainstream art world. Portland has always had its own sense of identity and artistic richness. It will be a joy to share my experiences and learn more about the wonders of Portland."

-Dr. King-Hammond

Dr. King-Hammond's talk will address her multifaceted career, whose roots stretch back to her childhood in New York City, where she first discovered her love of archaeology and art. Through her research, writing, and curatorial endeavors, she has brought many historical and contemporary African-American artists into the canon of American art.
